DESCRIBE THE PRESENT AND ORIGINAL (if known) PHYSICAL APPEARANCE
This ashlar stone fire station is two stories high. The structure is essentially two flat pilasters with a round arch in between. The stone of the bottom quarter of the building is cut in large blocks; the greater part of the building, however, is cut into smaller blocks resembling large bricks. The double doors in the middle of the first story are of wood and sheet glass, and have one piece sheet glass transoms. Above the doors on the second story is a balcony with a wrought iron rail. Behind this are seven large, double hung, one-over-one windows, arranged 2-3-2. The stilted round arch which surrounds the visible portions of the first and second stories is moulded, and has a large, ornate bracket for a keystone. The whole arch is recessed within a flat arch. To either side of the keystone, in the spandrels, is a rondelle. Above the arch is a braced frieze which is terminated at each end by a large cartouche. Atop this is a massive, braced cornice which has a stone balustrade above it.
